“ I read Charlie's obituary online today and just wanted to sent my heartfelt sympathy. Although I have never met you, I know all to well the pain you are feeling as I lost my beautiful son Jonathon in 2010. I'm not going to tell you that it gets easier to take, but I will tell you that somehow I have learned to breathe on my own without a conscious effort. Be kind to yourself and let your grief journey take you where it does. 2 + years later, I am stilling riding the waves of grief and I have learned to be okay with that. Loving deeply hurts when your heart is ripped to shreds, but on those days where the waves knock my feet out, I tell myself I wouldn't take back loving Jonathon to avoid the pain. Sometimes it helps, sometimes it doesn't. If you ever need anything, please feel free to reach out. Knowing I'm not alone and having people I can talk to who know exactly how bad it hurts has been a comfort on those really bad days. Again, I am so sorry...

“ I am so saddened to hear of your loss. I remember the days when Charlie came to our house and the many fun times we all had. I know we will miss him even though we got "out of touch" as the years passed. God calls all of us home at one time or another and no matter when, we must always be ready. He has promised we will all be together again in the Glorious place he has prepared for us. Please keep Charles in your memories and it will help ease the pain. May God bless you with peace and comfort as he has done for Charles. Be glad and rejoice for the length of time God gave him to us. Peace to all of you! Jackie and Jay; Jacob and Jayson. Class of 2011 remembering Charlie!
